

Adding to the daily routine -- go back past the previous section

Extraterritorial apartment building

Last night, I was in bed with the balcony window open, so I could hear it.

From multiple passersby:

Someone's getting a huge sum of money through someone else's insurance

Someone's got a huge amount of money

There were several shouts in succession.

The police cannot arrest anyone on suspicion due to procedural reasons, so they will likely remain silent even if there are reports of noise, etc.

So don't worry.

No matter what happens, this property is extraterritorial, so even if you report it, the police won't come.

Passersby, please keep shouting!

Therefore, you will hear shouts from passersby every single night from now on.

In effect, this apartment building is extraterritorial, beyond the reach of police authority.

By the way, even now---

Even though the money hasn't been transferred yet, they came to my room saying it wasn't enough...

Also, by the way... if you can't find a lawyer to represent you, I can introduce you to one, but I've been given a general overview of how to obtain information about fire insurance policies...

Google map